

Evening Public Ledger

Philadelphia, Wednesday, April 3, 1918

ODDS AND ENDS OF THE DAY'S NEWS CAUGHT BY THE CAMERA FOR THE LEDGER PICTURE PAGE

AS THOUGH OUT OF THE PAGES of Treasure Island step the five members of the crew of the auxiliary schooner Alexander Agassiz, who fitted up their tiny craft and set out into the Pacific Ocean as a raider to prey on shipping. All of them are Germans, but devoid of the usual luck that attends most Teutonic exploits. Overtaken by an American cruiser off the coast of Mexico, the crew of the Agassiz was returned to San Diego as prisoners for sentence under the laws of the United States.

THE AUDACITY OF THE PLOT of five Germans to prey upon the shipping of the Allies is accentuated by the diminutive size of their raiding craft, the auxiliary schooner Alexander Agassiz, here shown in tow of her captor, an American auxiliary cruiser.

COOKING AND CONSERVATION are the big "C's" for the girls at the Henry C. Lea School of Practice, Forty-seventh and Locust streets, where Miss Olga M. Osterag (that is she in the photograph) is imparting the latest methods indorsed by Herbert Hoover to the housewives of the future. Two of her pupils are Diana Ingle (left) and Virginia Culver.

OH, BOY, those were the happy days! Where is there a man who fails to recall the thrilling games on the vacant lot, the shouts of "fen evries!" "knuckle down!" and "movin' up"? Many years may have elapsed, but the game still lives, as the camera here proves.

IT IS NOT CLAIMING UNDOE credit for our boys who are learning the war game over in France to say that they are the pride of their teachers. Don't you find unmistakable signs of approval on the faces of the "Blue Devils" in the picture who are observing the big American at pistol practice? Committee on Public Information.

"ATTENTION!" SAYS FAY MARBLE, of the "Oh, Boy" company, in her smart, sleeveless coat, military cape and little military cap of white leather. Even the plain military cape must conform to the moment, so that in place of straps to hold it on the shoulders there is a belted waistcoat. These are being worn over light dresses for sports and even street wear.

HUNDREDS OF CAPABLE WOMEN have renounced the comforts of home and fireside to aid Uncle Sam in waging a vigorous war, and not the least notable among them is Mrs. Nina Van Winkle, of New Jersey, chief of the lecture bureau of the food administration.

Clinedinst. Photo.

GO TO THE FARM. YOUNG MAN, is the new call to the youth of America. And the boys of Cumberland County, N. J., have responded to that call, voicing, as it does, their country's need, in a fashion that is not less than noble. Here you have two of these lads who are devoting one-half of each day to working on the farms in the neighborhood of Bridgeton. They work in conjunction, one of them laying out the furrows and the other setting out onions.

TWO ZEALOUS WORKERS for the great cause of democracy are Colonel Steele, who, as chief of the wideawake British-Canadian recruiting mission, has become a familiar figure to Philadelphians, and Miss Elizabeth Hays, Head of the Queen Mary Needlework Guild, which is working valuable relief for the Belgians.